

What to watch for when applying for jobs:

Many companies are looking past your resume and doing their homework before making a hiring decision. A few things to think about when looking for a job.

1. What does your Facebook page say about you?
2. What does your LinkedIn page say about you?
3. Do you have videos on YouTube?
4. Legal issues? If so did you address them?
5. What have you posted on Twitter?
6. What do you pin on Pinterest?

These items may seem small, but these websites often portray the real you. What will an employer think if they see a controversial post or picture on Facebook?

You have talents and skills that an employer will want. You want to be judged by your body of work not by a post on a social media site.
